The WHO estimates that at least 60% of childhood hearing loss and 50% of adult hearing loss is preventable through primary prevention. Technological advances in health care delivery and recognition of the main preventable causes of hearing loss is critical to achieving these goals. This webinar will draw upon international experts in various aspects of hearing loss prevention to share the new frontiers and advances in their respective fields. From practical recommendations from the newly developed CGHH guidance on early identification and intervention in low resource regions to the latest science in vaccine development for CMV, this webinar promises to shed light on the various ways that we can prevent hearing loss throughout the world.
